Summary : Free plantation forests and biodiversity oxymoron or opportunity pdf download - this book brings together a selection of original research articles that address biodiversity and conservation in plantation forests although such forests are perhaps the poor cousins of the species richer natural and semi-natural forests they can still make a significant contribution to biodiversity conservation this is particularly the case in regions that have lost much of their natural forest cover comparatively few studies have previously attempted to examine the biota associated with plantation forests and as a result some conservation needs and opportunities highlighted here have not been adequately recognised conversely plantations have sometimes been a direct cause of natural habitat loss and greater awareness is required to avoid this with future afforestation projects the contributions in this volume provide new information about a wide range of taxa from lichens to primates from various temperate and tropical regions around the world in the context of plantation forestry combined with suggestions for forest management at both stand and landscape levels to improve biodiversity conservation the findings are equally of interest to the scientific community policy makers and forest managers the topical examples of applied conservation issues will make the volume also highly valuable for use in conservation biology courses reprinted from biodiversity and conservation volume 17 no 5 2008
