Summary : Free the mms instructional design model a delphi study pdf download - instructional design models to be used for designing instruction and or training are in no short supply however everyone has preferences and when there is not one particular model that is best suited for the way you work one alternative is to design your own model meacham miley and smith designed a model for instructional design that uses a spoke-and-wheel metaphor to express the cyclical nature of the instructional design process the wheel with evaluation as the central hub allows designers to enter the design process at any point and to evaluate work inherited from other team members or former team members unlike earlier models of instructional design where the designer must wait until the end of the process to evaluate the design the cyclical nature of the mms model allows the design process to flow in either direction and for evaluation after each phase if desired the purpose of the research for this dissertation was to ask a panel of experts in the field of instructional design to what extent they perceived the model as effective efficient and easy to use the panel was gathered from private business government and the education industries this modified two-round delphi study showed in its overall findings that the mms instructional design model is easy to use perceived to be effective and most probably is efficient which will result in saved design time and money it was recommended that further real-world field tests be conducted these will commence later in 2008
