Standards <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Collects and represents information about objects or events in simple graphs Understands that one can find out about a group of things by studying just a few of them Overview Students are asked the question, "Have you ever been fishing?" to which they respond using tally marks on a tally chart. The results of the data collection are then discussed in a Math Huddle.	Materials <ul style="list-style-type: none"> chart paper markers Warming Up for the Stretch From the beginning of the school year, the daily Calendar Board should include instruction on using tally marks as a recording tool so that the teacher can model the use of this strategy. Some daily classroom uses of tallies include recording each day of school, recording the kinds of weather during the month, or keeping track of good behavior by awarding a tally each time a group is "taught" behaving well. As a result, students gain familiarity with the use of tallies. Even so, before they are expected to create a tally chart independently for a Math Stretch, they need explicit instructions on how to carry out this task. For the Tally Chart Stretch, the teacher asks each student to respond to a simple yes or no question by making a mark on a tally chart as the teacher announces the task. Once students understand the process, assign the Tally Chart Stretch to the class to be completed independently. Display a completed tally chart from a previous data-collection task so it is available as an example.
